Tips on Caring for Granite & Quartz Countertops

When it comes to cleaning your kitchen counters, one method does not fit all. Discover how to clean countertops and keep them in top shape.

Granite

- Clean them daily with a damp cloth and a few drops of dishwashing soap. Rinse the countertop with clean water and then dry it with a soft cloth. There's no need to use chemicals or specialty cleaners every day.
- Use a granite sealer every 12 months. Sealing keeps stains and germs from settling into pores and hairlines cracks that are inherent with any natural stone.
- avoid using vinegar, lemon juice, harsh cleaners, or abrasive materials, which can cause damage.

Quartz

- The best thing for cleaning quartz countertops is mild dish soap, water, and a soft non-abrasive cloth. Though quartz is stain-resistant, it's not entirely stain-proof, so it's always best to clean up messes on quartz counters as soon as possible.
- Under normal conditions, quartz is burn-resistant—but it is still best to use a trivet or hot pad underneath any heat-generating devices such as hot pans or crock-pots. Also, be aware that sudden changes in temperature, especially near an edge or cutout, may cause the countertop to crack.
- For tougher cleaning, such as hardened food, dried grease, and other items, you may need to use a plastic putty knife to scrape something off before wiping it down. Don't use an abrasive scouring pad, which could scratch the surface over time. You may also need a mild degreaser to break down hardened grease. Make sure it is labeled safe for quartz surfaces. Don't use cleaning products with bleach in them.
